

make her craft as good as it can possibly be."

Wilkinson is delighted by the next generation of heroes as well. "I adore Greg," she enthuses about Dark Angel's William Gregory Lee, who plays Joxer's son Virgil. "Greg and I had the best time, because we were both originally hired for three episodes. We learned the ropes together, stayed in the same hotel, dealt with the same stuff. It was wonderful to have another person there to go through it with and to see a new country [New Zealand]. He's a sweetheart and such a brilliant actor, I hope he'll be a friend for life," to which she quickly adds, "I hope all of them will. I'm so close to so many people, I'll always be in touch with them."

"The adventure" is what Wilkinson will miss most now that Xena has come to an end. "Acting in general is a wonderful, challenging thing, but with this particular show, there's a new challenge every week. When you get it, when you make it work, it feels so good and you're so content that you've made it work. After every episode, I say the ending line from Hook to myself—"That was a great game"—because it's such hard work, easily 14 hours most days, and it flies by. And I'm so exhausted I can barely even speak afterward, but I can't wait to get back there."

"I'm sad to see Xena end, but I'm really interested to see what everyone does next. As much fun as it is, it has made me confident and eager to move on to the next thing," Adrienne Wilkinson admits. Then, she laughs, "I just hope the next thing is as interesting as Xena."
