

THAT'S ALL, FOLKS!

“Playing a normal person might be nice...

I only seem to play crazy people or angels...”

HUDSON LEICK

For those fans who didn't have the good fortune of being able to attend the UK's biggest annual Xena convention, Chariots of War III, which took place over the weekend of 29 June – 1 July at Heathrow's Radisson Edwardian Hotel, Xena Magazine's KATE BARKER brings us in on the action...

Continuing the success of the last two years, the location for Chariots of War, Part III was once again the stunning Radisson Edwardian Hotel at Heathrow, London. The weekend's shenanigans kicked off in the serene Newbury Suite (complete with fountain and rock garden) on the Friday evening with a celebrity cocktail party, where guests and convention attendees mingled in a relaxed and friendly environment. This was followed by the customary first-night disco, which kept fans dancing to an eclectic mix of retro and new music until 2am.

Saturday's events began in at least four different locations. Attendees queued for photo sessions with the guests from 9am to 12 noon in the Newbury suite, while in the main hall, things kicked off at 9am with selected Xena episodes, followed by a panel with representatives of Xena Magazine: namely, our illustrious editor Darryl Curtis and myself. The crowd was most attentive as Darryl and I presented clips from recent Xena episodes and
